Although an average of 80% of the admitted students have completed their graduation, the University is well aware that 20% of the students are still to undertake their terminal examination and are engaged preparing for the same.

Further, for the students who may still have to undertake their terminal examinations, the University has decided to use the synchronous and asynchronous mode of online teaching-learning and faculty members have been advised to interact with all students in online sessions to resolve the doubts and problems of students. The students who are engaged with preparation of their terminal examinations will be able to access these online contents as per their convenience from our LMS system and interact with our faculty. Considering these factors, the University has decided to modify the date of online teaching communicated earlier.

As such, the teachers have designed and developed content to be delivered online (both synchronous and asynchronous) and will include online assignments and assessments. Students will also be given access to the rich, online library resources to support their learning. In addition, efforts are being made to make available other MOOCs courses to augment the learning experience.
